BUCKLEY WARDEN

PARTNER

In a profession where some attorneys tell clients what they want to hear, Buckley stands apart—he tells clients what they need to know whether they like it or not. This candor is more than a personal trait; it's a strategic asset in Buckley's litigation and general counsel practice. He represents individuals and businesses in complex disputes in many different industries, usually related to construction and fire suppression issues. His clients rely on him not just for litigation, but for contract and business process improvements as general counsel.

Buckley's career began with a trial by fire. After his first boss passed away just five months into practice, his second mentor placed "enormous faith" in him, entrusting him with solo jury trials in his first year. "I was thrown in the deep end and nearly sank several times," Buckley recalls. "But I survived. What doesn't kill you makes you an excellent trial attorney."

He's served as first-chair counsel in complex matters in state and federal courts, handling multi-party cases from coast to coast. Whether the stakes involve seven figures or a few thousand dollars, Buckley approaches each case with the same intensity and focus: achieving the client's goal efficiently and effectively.

When trial is inevitable, Buckley thrives. His courtroom presence gives clients an edge in a world where litigation often inspires fear. He's especially skilled in bet-the-company cases, where creative strategy and relentless advocacy are paramount. "I love solving problems that need creative solutions," he says. "I'm your attorney when you have a novel claim that needs a novel path—usually with no insurance, scarce resources, and time pressure, just to make it interesting."

One of Buckley's favorite tools? Depositions. "I have a knack for spotting deception and asking questions for hours to uncover what a witness is hiding," he says. "Taking a deposition that settles a case is deeply satisfying—and I've had the pleasure of doing it several times." Outside the courtroom, Buckley serves as outside general counsel to both local and national businesses. He advises clients from startup through expansion and exit, helping them navigate contracts, refine internal policies, and strike deals that balance risk and reward. His ability to translate complex legal concepts into actionable, goal-oriented advice has earned him lasting client loyalty.

In a unique specialty, Buckley also investigates fire and fire suppression-related incidents nationwide. Working closely with technical experts, he analyzes catastrophic losses and assesses compliance with National Fire Protection Association standards for wet, dry, and foam systems across diverse applications. Buckley has been to dozens of incident scenes over the last ten years to investigate primarily sprinkler-related claims under NFPA 13 and 25 and pre-engineered system claims under NFPA 17 and 17A. In 2026, he became the only attorney member of the National Fire Protection Association (NFPA) 17A technical committee.

Buckley Warden brings deep experience, fearless advocacy, and practical insight to every matter he handles. Whether in litigation, counsel, or crisis, he's the attorney clients trust when the stakes are high, and the path forward isn't obvious.

OUTSIDE OF WORK

Outside of the office, Buckley loves cheering on his two sons, Logan and Grayson, as they play football and basketball. Buckley also runs weekly to keep up with his growing boys. Continuing with the brutal honesty thing: Buckley is a terrible golfer. Buckley also enjoys teaching introductory Business Law at University of Richmond.
